State fact sheets for grandparents and other relatives raising children

AARP, The Brookdale Foundation Group, Casey Family Programs, Child Welfare League of America, Children's Defense Fund, and Generations United have partnered to produce state and national GrandFacts fact sheets for grandparents and other relatives raising children. The state fact sheets include state-specific data and programs as well as information about foster care, public benefits, educational assistance and state laws. Visit www.grandfactsheets.org to find this and all GrandFacts state fact sheets.

Children in Foster Care

 Sometimes state child welfare agencies place children in foster care with grandparents or other relatives. This is often called "kinship care."

 Federal law requires states to notify all known relatives within 30 days of children's removal from their parents.

In 2011 in Maine:

- 1536 children are in foster care with the Department of Health and Human Services
- 333 of those are in relative foster care, including pre-adoptive relative care, relative foster care, or pending a license for relative foster care

Placement Policies

- When children are brought into the care of the Department, priority of placement is with kinship providers, either related through blood, marriage or adoption, or with fictive kin. When placement is with a kin caregiver, the caregiver is notified of the requirement that the caregiver apply for foster care licensing within 30 days in order to continue receiving a per diem payment. The application process is completed within a 120 day period of time, and once the applicant is licensed, the caregiver receives the basic foster care reimbursement rate.
- In the process of determining licensure approval, the Department engages the family in a strengths-based home study and waives for the family many of the non-safety standards required of non-relative families, such as waiving the fundamentals training requirement.
- The Department is achieving success in its prioritization of placement of children with relatives, with approximately 30% of placements now occurring in relative homes.

Subsidized Guardianship

Maine is implementing the Federal Guardianship Assistance Program (GAP). GAP provides guardianship subsidies for eligible children who have been living with relatives in foster care and cannot return to their parents, and for whom adoption has been ruled out. Children receiving guardianship subsidies are in permanent placement with relatives and are no longer in foster care.

Public Benefits

Federal and state public benefits programs can help with income, food, healthcare, home energy, telephone and other needs for those who are eligible. Eligibility requirements vary with each public benefit and sometimes are different from state to state. Some benefits are for the family and others are for children or older adults individually. Children are often eligible for public benefits even if their caregivers do not have legal guardianship or custody. Grandparents may become eligible for benefits programs when their household size increases.

Help with Public Benefits

Educational Enrollment

Relative caregivers can contact their local school district's administrative office or their local school to find out how to register the child and what paperwork is needed. Caregivers may need birth records, health records or previous school records. Some states have laws that allow relative caregivers to enroll children they are raising in school. These laws are often called "education consent" laws, but may be called something else in your state.

Early Intervention, Special Education and Related Services

What you need to know:

• The Federal Individuals with Disabilities Act (IDEA) - From birth to age 21, children who have learning disabilities, physical disabilities or other special needs may be able to get special early intervention, preschool and special education services in school through the federal IDEA. Services may include speech, physical, and occupational therapies.

Child Find – A part of the IDEA that requires states to identify, locate and evaluate children in the areas of cognitive and physical functioning, hearing and vision, speech and language and social and emotional development as early as possible. Once the Child Find evaluation team, which includes a child's caregivers, has decided if a child is eligible for early intervention or preschool special education services, an Individual Family Service Plan (IFSP; birth to three years of age) or an Individual Education Plan (IEP; three to five years of age) is developed and services begin shortly at no cost.

Where to find help for children with special needs:

 Maine Office of Special Services – Maine Department of Education - provides oversight and support for the delivery of early intervention services to eligible children age birth to under age three and their families and of a free, appropriate public education to eligible children age three to twenty with disabilities.
